

FISHERS.

L. FISHERS THAT ARE QUICK, SURE, WARY AND SHY.

Among Them Are the Heron Kingfisher, the Mink, the Water Snake and the Snapping Turtle. Follow Them Land Their Prizes.

One who can suppress for his eagerness with the rod on stream and summon patience to wait and watch the ways of and birds," said one who had been able to do so, "will die that he is not the only fisher in waters. Chief among the other are the heron, the kingfisher, the water snake and the snapping turtle.

Angler passing down in a brook in his rod will rarely see any of the fishers at their work, for they are all wary and shy, perhaps with exception of the water snake, which has been fished between the lured banks of any trout stream. Discovering one or more of the water snake, except as a useful appetite for trout—twisted some overhanging branch, for prey.

While fishing in a Sullivan brook I lay down in the shade, waiting to eat my lunch and smoke. While thus in quietude I saw a trout drop down on the edge of a rock only a rod or two away. After minutes of statuesque watching, the trout darted into the water, withdrew its head into its bill and flew.

more than five minutes after on had disappeared a mink limping up the brook. In a moment later it appeared good half pound trout in its mouth.

Expert fisher had scarcely gone when a hard voiced kingfisher on a dead limb overhanging a twenty yards from where I stood was not long on the limb when it went in the water and with a trout. I was trying to get what the probable drain on the population of the country from the inroads of these rascals when a water snake lunging up the stream carrying a trout that was big enough to eat. Then I thought it was me to get to fishing again before expert and persistent wild bird robbed me of my chance.

Like snapping turtles, select trout for their prey. They lie at the foot of some deep pool on one long, slender leg, as immovable as if it were a stone, waits patiently the trout from the pool. It is seldom a long one. Suddenly long neck shoots out like an arm and the great bill is buried for a moment in the water. The aim is faultless, and when the bird's head is in sight again a large trout comes up with it. The fisher, from the creek, trailing his legs, and flies home with his burden.

the season, when trout begin to run, when small spring runs to the stream, the heron will be fishing there, as it seems to, as does the kingfisher, all of the fish it loves so well to. One heron with a free scope stream will likely take from a hundred trout, many of them big spawn, during the time this season, which is from the time the creeks in the spring runs on them again the following.

Like fishes all winter long as the summer. In fact, it is a long period that it is active to trout. The kingfisher is not so certain in its fishing, but one failure never leaves it its perch on the dead limb. It seems to prefer to settle in its watchman's rattle cry and dive until the prize is in its beak.

Kingfisher is no stickler for size but tries for the first thing. It is a greedy fisher, or rather the family that it feeds its appetite, for the bird is known to return, ten times to a place within an hour and to a trout every time. A fish it makes in that length of time, of anglers nowadays, snaking, basking by the hungry every trout stream, fish such tact and cunning that they their prey by thousands time they come out of their gill places, which is as soon as they begins to get warm, until end of winter drives them from their holes.

There is no knowing how great a trout retails on the snakes warfare, but that they do deal is known to every angler. Many a big trout went to have from one to four water snakes in his stomach.

fortunate not only for the for all kinds of brook, pond fishes, that the snapping turtle extremely slow growth and eggs are themselves the prey of snakes, muskrats and various other animals. It is one of the best to the tiny tribe. Bulky creatures, they are so active when hunting a trout or active when snapping at ever escapes."—Chas. Green.
